Translation of the foregoing

Our God, our God, save to us our Sultan.

O!
Our God, our God, save to us our Sultan,
Abd El Hamid El Ghazi, in triumph and happiness;
Save him, O God, prever, and destroy all his enemies.
Preserve him, gratified forever, in glory & happiness.
Open to him the easy way, and preserve him in the fundamental religion;
And give him full power to govern us with justice.
Preserve him to us in wisdom, & we will follow him.
Preserve him in this world in prosperity, power, & riches.
His ach is highly to be honored for continuing to nominate the best of his representatives,
as Rachad Pacha, our Governor, the capable and good manager.
O God, save him to us with his wisdom;
Preserve him, forever living in honor, and keep him for us;
And the prayer continually to our Prophets is that he incline him to ameliorate our State.

As will be perceived, the names of the present Sultan and the present Governor of Palestine are substituted for those of their predecessors in whose honor the original words were written to the Syrian air, as already mentioned in my former report.

I have not been successful in finding the words to air No. 2.

Enclosure:
1. Report of the Agriculture and Horticulture of Palestine for the month of October. 1889.

Report of the Agriculture and Horticulture of Palestine for the month of October, 1889.

The "former rain" which set in at so early a date this season, has continued this month in only a few light and wide-apart showers. The weather has remained warm and summer-like, with cool nights and mornings, until the last three days which have presented a marked change, being decidedly cold, the thermometer marking 56° F.—

Early in the month the Olive commenced coming into market. The yield is unusually abundant and of good quality. The grape vintage is drawing to a close, and will end next month. Dates of good size and flavor have been ripe since the early part of October. In Palestine they are chiefly produced at Gaza; but they are also sent here from Akka (St. Jean d'Acre), being quite abundant at both places. Pomegranates continue to come in. Since the close of September sugar cane has been brought into the Jerusalem market. It is grown in the Jordan Valley, in the Ferry of Jericho, but is never manufactured into sugar, being used only for chewing. It is produced with little or no culture, and never requires replanting, the young canes shooting out from the old stock.

But little field-work has been done since the end of the harvest of grain, which came to a close in the bringing in of the sesame and dura crops, as reported last month.

All the common garden vegetables are still in market in fair supply; and the onion crop is now being housed, in great abundance.
